BONERS, MOANERS, & GROANERS

For more than thirty years I have taught those darling little children in the grade schools. It has been necessary for me to give them examinations on what they have studied and should have learned. Sometimes the examination is written. Other times it is oral. I also have to ask them questions about what they are doing. One thing is certain: If teacher is not clear in pronouncing the word or doesn't make the meaning of a thought clear, those kids will give you unusual answers. The kids always enjoyed trying to catch teacher with a riddle or a puzzle. Or find some that the teacher doesn't know.

Frank came up with this riddle: "What was the first thing that Napoleon did when he became thirty three years old?"

Joey raised his hand. He wanted to answer the question. This is what he said.

"He gave a big birthday party. He invited all the boys and the girls. They had a lot of ice cream."

"Wrong," replied Frank. "Anyone else wants to try to answer it?"

Marsha was in a giggling mood. She raised her hand and told this to Frank.

"I don't know what he did when he was 33. But I know what he did when he was 32. And I won't tell you. You took my new pencil away from me. Give it to me back."

I should add that Marsha did get her pencil back. So the class all said: "Give up. What's the answer?"

"The first thing that Napoleon did when he became thirty three was.....", and then Frank stopped. Something was wrong. He continued.

"I'm sorry. I think I got the riddle all mixed up. I heard my father say it. I will ask him tonight to write it down so I get it the right way."

The next morning Frank handed me a sheet of paper. Which I then read to the class:

"What is the first thing that Napoleon did when he completed this thirty third year? The answer is: He began his thirty fourth year. Please forgive Frank. He mixes things up at times. Cordially yours, Mr. Louis Mauser."

Then Lena raised her hand. She had something to tell us.

"The other day we were talking about mixed emotions and we gave examples. I have another one for you. I have a toothache. I do not want to go to the dentist. My mother makes me go. And when we get there, there is a sign on his door. He is away for his vacation. He won't be back for a week. So I am both happy and sad at the same time."

I told Lena that this was a very good illustration. Then Tommy wanted to know something.

"I heard my aunt say better late than never. She told me this was a proverb. I can see that it is better to come to school ten minutes late than not to come at all. So all I miss is ten minutes work. But if I was going to catch a train and missed it, then how is it better I came late than didn't come at all? You tell me."

I wish somebody would do something about proverbs. Maybe bring them up-to-date. I could see a man with ten bags who missed the only train that had left the station ten minutes ago. Then Jimmy saved the day. He raised his hand.

"My uncle is a very important man in Washington. He once missed his boat to Europe. He came late. So he got another boat and then he caught the boat he missed. So it is better sometimes to be late."

Randy had something to ask me. It also concerned a proverb.

"My father always tells me that time is money. Now I have five minutes. Will you buy them from me for twenty-five cents? Where can I sell it if you don't buy it?"

I often wonder how kids think these things up. Yet I think that they live in a different world. I agree: Bring those proverbs up-to-date. You go and try to explain this one: "The pitcher goes so much to the well that in the end it breaks." I failed. They wanted to know: How can a pitcher go to a well? What's the matter, no running water in the house? Why didn't the people use a plastic pitcher that couldn't break? Did the pitcher have a handle on it? Was it a big pitcher or a small pitcher?

You don't realize how happy a teacher can sometimes be when the 3:00 bell rings for dismissal. Until we meet again.
